The Problem

90% of learning and career opportunities happen through relationships such as mentoring and networking, yet companies are spending $166 billion annually on formal courses/classroom-based learning.

Companies leave employee mentorship, networking, and development to serendipity or highly biased, inefficient manual programs; making hybrid culture engagement and DEI goals impossible to achieve.

10KC

Market Opportunity

$166 billion/year is spent on formal enterprise training & learning.

$1,300/employee on average is spent on L&D.

Yet, 90% of employee learning happens informally, outside of the classroom and is left to serendipity and nepotism.

Get companies to reallocate spending where impact takes place:

Reallocate $100/employee/year from formal L&D to informal which yields to $3B in annual revenue potential within Fortune 500 organizations and $10B in annual revenue potential across all organizations with more than 200 employees.
